Status of State Fund Programs

Forty-three States have developed State Financial Assurance Funds which not only provide tank owners with a means of complying with the federal financial responsibility regulations, but have also expended more than $5 billion to clean up leaking UST sites over the past 10 years. Where available, links to the individual state's fund web page are provided. Note that by following any of the links below, you exit EPA web space and enter web space hosted by the respective state. ¹ These state funds continue to accept new releases, and continue to provide financial responsibility coverage.

² These state funds no longer accept new releases, thus they no longer provide financial responsibility coverage.

³ These states have provided cleanup funds for a certain number of sites, but they never had approved state funds.

⁴ Washington participates in a reinsurance program.

⁵ West Virginia had an insurance-type fund, but it is no longer active.
